When you think of a mouse trap, you probably picture your old favorite cartoon where a spring-loaded piece of metal snaps down on the mouse over a wooden board. Of course, in cartoons, the mouse never really gets hurt. In real life, however, that is not the case. If you want to make sure that the mice you catch will be able to walk away, you'll need to use a humane mouse trap instead. Click: thesmartpicker.com

Humane mouse traps are a safe, gentler alternative to traditional snap-and-kill or glue paper methods. They eliminate the mess and the spread of germs that are caused by traditional traps. There's no death, no body, no blood left behind, and nothing to throw away. They are a good choice for you, your family, your pesky intruders, and the environment.

There's also no need to use mouse or rat poison because humane mouse traps allow you place a rodent-friendly treat inside as bait. Since the trap itself safely contains the animal, there's no reason to poison the critter. The animal stays put until you are ready to release it into the wild. Get more info: The Smart Picker

When you are ready to let it go, a delayed release mechanism gives you enough time to get as far away from the trap as possible before the animal is set free. It prevents you from accidentally getting bitten. This is especially important if you're worried about rabies or other communicable diseases.

Humane mouse traps are definitely the way to go if you are currently experiencing a pest problem in your home. Don't spend a lot on an exterminator who may or may not solve your problem and don't waste money on one-use traps you'll end up throwing in the garbage. Quick, safe, reusable humane mouse traps are the perfect solution for your critter crisis! Visit: TheSmart Picker
